
This is a story about the SS ELEVEN.

These brave few volunteered for this mission.

*Together they navigated
the never ending sea
of readings and projects.*

*They supported each other
when times were tough.
By commenting on each others stuff.
Primarily because we had to
as it was part of the never ending list that was rough*

Ironically we know little about each other although we spend hours together regularly.

Occasionally we communicate via email at 2 am.

*Which sounds very personal and that we must be tight
if we communicate that late at night.*

However our fragmented emails and attached assignments are just examples of how our communication skills have failed.

Our 2am conversations are not magical or inspirational they are all about the assignments due before the next nightfall.

Sadly this is the extent of our bond since we are too busy creating standard connected technologically integrated literacy strategic lesson plans

Our secret one, has to put up with our ridiculousness every Tuesday

*She will probably runaway
the second she sees us in the hallway someday*

Although we finish part of our mission soon we are only 1/3rd and 2/5th and well who knows how long of the way through

I would not change a single thing and I am grateful for the craziness that has ensued.

So I bid adue but only for a day or two since this craziness continues in January too.

The SS ELEVEN and secret ONE

REASONS WHY SCHOOL MAKES PEOPLE CRAZY

AND

WHY PEOPLE BOND

This article is a report of a study where psychologist put students under situations where they caused the students to feel extreme anxiety in order to prove that a person can go mad from external stresses and it is not necessarily all a problem with brain chemicals.

This article is all about what makes people bond, of course this is a bit of tongue and cheek since the items listed in this article we were not able to do because of the homework we had this semester.
